A series of scientific meetings were set up since 2001 due to the collaboration of scholars in Ancient History from the Universities of Barcelona and Zaragoza, with the support of Ibercaja and Caja de Ahorros de la Inmaculada.

The meetings will be held every two years and they pretend to be a focus of continuous debate. Relevant subjects will be selected every season, which will be related to particular aspects of current importance in any field of Ancient History such as social, ideological or institutional world. The final aim is to publish quickly all the communications submitted in the Conferences in the collection monographies edited by Centro para el Estudio de la Interdependencia Provincial en la Antigüedad Clásica (CEIPAC), from Barcelona University, with the general title of Instrumenta.

The first result of this interuniversity collaboration is the present monograph that collects all the papers presented in the I Coloquio de Historia Antigua Universitat de Barcelona, on "Religion and political propaganda in the Roman world" held on the 4th-5th June 2001. Thirteen researchers took part coming from different Spanish Universities (Barcelona, Cantabria, La Laguna, Complutense and Carlos III from Madrid, Málaga and Zaragoza), as well as the University Eötvös Lorand from Budapest (Hungary). All of them specialists in diverse aspects related to the proposed subject.

The institution of the clientship was one of the fundamental bases of the Roman Republic, whose importance was demonstrated during the civil wars that allowed the step in Rome from the Republic to the Principality.

The clientship of Pompey the Great (cos. I 70 B.C.) in Hispania was as important as famous, even considered as paradigmatic in their class, but up the present it has not received the attention that deserves. This work corrects this gap.

In eleven chapters it is analysed the career of Pompey, the formation and evolution of their clientship, your bases, activities and propaganda, the support received during the civil war of the years 49-44 B.C. and the day after the finalization of the war.

The Pompeian clientship of Hispania is not only studied, but also that of other Roman provinces, in order to be able to offer a better complete picture.

The book is supplemented with a wide bibliography and several indexes to facilitate its consultation.

The Instrumenta Collection has been created to spread publications referring to the economic and social life of the Roman world. We have collected so far all works from the CEIPAC group. Most of them deal with amphora epigraphy as basis to study food production and trade. All of them have been carried out as part of the project Timbres Amphoriques of the Union Académique Internationale, sponsored by the Real Academia de la Historia de Madrid.

The Instrumenta Collection would like to be to be basic reference to amphora epigraphic studies, and with this idea borne in mind, we encourage all colleagues who would like to publish works related to this subject to take part in it. The collection not only deals with this specific subject but it is opened, as we have already pointed out, to other studies related to other aspects of the economic and social history of the Classic World.
